

Press Release:

IAN LEAVER from the Isle of Eigg scooped one of the first-ever Champions for Sustainable Communities Awards at a ceremony in Edinburgh on Tuesday March 18th.

Ian (45) was recognised for his fundraising and practical efforts as development co-ordinator for the Isle of Eigg Heritage Trust which led to the provision of renewable electricity to every home, business, and community building on the island.

Unfortunately he was unable to attend the presentation to pick up his Community Group Award, however, David Cousland from Triodos Bank which helped in the financing of the Eigg electrification project, was on hand to represent him at Edinburgh's Apex International Hotel – chosen for its environmentally friendly credentials – and to pick up the award on his behalf.

Once he was told of his success Ian said: "I am obviously delighted and totally surprised by this, but at the end of the day it is really great for the island and raising its profile, it's not just about me!"

The award was made by Scottish designer and craftsman, Scott Irvine, using wood from fallen trees and fused glass off-cuts. Ian will also get the chance to visit another sustainable community project or similar experience in order to give him further inspiration for his work in his community project.

The organisation's Frazer Scott said: "All of our 20 finalists were of an excellent calibre and should be proud of their valuable efforts towards sustainability. However, there had to be one winner in each of the four categories and we are delighted to announce Ian Leaver as the best of the best in the Community Group category.

“At the heart of sustainable development lies the leadership and commitment to drive forward change. These awards were a great opportunity to honour individuals who have made a difference by improving the environment, economy and society at the local level.

“All the winners have shown outstanding endeavour that proves it’s possible to really achieve a better quality of life for future generations. It’s the power of individuals, such as these, that can make a real difference, and we hope the Awards will inspire others to make positive changes in their own communities.”

The three other winners were Liz Stewart from Ullapool (Business), Ian Mitchell from Invershin, Sutherland (International Development) and Helen Houston from Golspie, Sutherland (Public/Third Sector).

The nation-wide awards were devised to recognise individuals from across society who have led the way in improving the quality of a local environment in some way – whether that’s helping solve a community problem, transforming a piece of land or derelict space, or reducing climate change impacts.

Forward Scotland, a registered charity, is the country’s leading independent non-governmental organisation that works to make Scotland a sustainable nation in ways that create economic benefits, improve health and well-being and address issues of social justice to help change people’s lives for the better.

For further information on the work of Forward Scotland visit www.forward-scotland.org.uk or call us on 056000 10 560.

ENDS

Notes for Editors:

For the last 11 years Forward Scotland has championed an original approach to sustainable development. They carry out this work through a variety of projects and grant schemes, supported by information exchange. Forward Scotland is dedicated to improving local environments and helping communities to achieve a better and more sustainable quality of life.

Frazer Scott is the Acting Chief Executive of Forward Scotland.

If you require further press information please contact Stuart Hall or Annicka Ericsson on 01786 450675 or e-mail on stuart-hall@btconnect.com